IDAHO BARREL FUTURITY

Nampa, Idaho – May 6-8, 2016

PARKER DOMINATES IN IDAHO!

I was excited to go to the Idaho Futurity because it was a big open regulation pattern and the producers do such a fantastic job trying to make it a great event with the ground and awards. I wasn't sure how 'Peanut' was going to do since we have not been on a roll since December at the CN Futurity in CA. I knew she would try her hardest because she always does but they are still babies. I didn't really do a lot different to prepare; I try to keep everything consistent with my horses. The only thing I've changed in the last month or so is I've started running her in a martingale.

After my first run I was pleasantly shocked at running a 17.3 because it felt like she did it easily. I was so proud of her. The next day I just wanted to make another smooth run and win the average for her because I felt like she deserved to win her own title. She was a little short going into the second barrel so to make sure we didn't hit the third, I spanked her up into it; maybe overriding her a little causing her to step off the backside a little. But she actually clocked a 17.2 to be faster than the day before.

Continue Idaho...

A.A. CALLISTER
HORSE • RIDER • HOME

I won 1st in the 1st round, 3rd in the 2nd round and won the average in the futurity. I won both goes and the average in the Derby on Tuneful and also placed in the first go and average in the Derby on KN Fabs Lady Fame. On Tuneful and Peanut I won 1st and 2nd in the open average on Tuneful and Peanut. I also won money on Royal Czech Mate in the 1D and placed in the average. I won around $6800, 3 saddles, and a ton of other wonderful prizes....The whole board did an amazing job. Well organized, great ground, fun atmosphere, and wonderful awards. Staci Van-Osten went above and beyond to make sure the ground was fabulous

My Royal Lydia... her nickname is Peanut because she was little when she was a baby and still isn't very big, just real stout. She looks like she is cow bred and she is all running bred. She is turny but not the really ratey kind that you have to ask to run the whole way. She is full of try and very gritty I think that's what makes her good. She never gives up just pins her ears and powers through things...I have owned her since she was a 2 yr old. I bought her off the track and she was just track broke. I've done everything else with her.

Mental Game... I ran 5 horses there. I guess I just try to have everything in order before I start with the first one so I'm not stressing about anything but my job of being the best jockey I can be. I guess I don't really think about it when I'm jumping from one horse to another because I ride them all everyday so I know them very well. I know their feel and what they need from me so I don't worry much about it. I know the nature of the game well enough that if one horse doesn't do well you just have to clear your head and not take it out on the next one. Some days are great and some are not--thank GOD there is always another race.

Each horse is very different in their own way but they all know my feel and cues so I don't have to ride them drastically different ways. I might have to sit a little sooner on one than the other or throttle one to the first, etc. Tuneful and Peanut have a completely different feel from one another--just the size alone makes a big difference. Peanut is real round in her turns and runs low and Tuneful is more upright and has a massive stride. I feel Peanut is a little bit easier to jockey but can't knock Tuneful.

Plans for the summer... I plan on going to rodeos this summer and probably more futurities this fall when I can fit them in. I just want to make my circuit finals and season all my mares and see where that takes us in the future. I am really enjoying the futurities but I also have big goals, rodeo-wise, so it's hard to pick.

I want to thank my sponsors: Silver Lining, RES Boots, and Ariat.

ARE YOU PREPARED TO WIN?

By Ty Hillman

Why don't the best athletes always win? How can someone compete at the best of their ability all day and then fall apart moments before they clinch the victory? Why do some people execute the fundamentals flawlessly when practicing, but are unable to execute during the game or competition? These are questions that have fascinated me for several years, as a competitor myself, as well as a coach. I have studied continuously to gain a better understanding of all the factors that effect human performance and to answer the questions posed above.

Obviously, there are numerous factors that affect our behavior and performance, but according to a study done by Professor of Psychology, C.R. Snyder, the author of "The Psychology of Hope", there are two major predictors of success in any endeavor. After analyzing numerous variables including personality, physical traits, attitude, and IQ, Snyder concluded that goal orientation and mental toughness were the two most important predictors of success. If individuals have a clear focus of what they want to achieve and they have adopted the attitude that nothing will stop them from achieving it, Snyder concluded that those people have the greatest probability to be successful.

Mental toughness is synonymous with emotional mastery. Mentally tough individuals control their emotions, think disciplined thoughts under pressure, are emotionally resilient after a setback, and can control their state of mind on command. These are the people who compete ferociously when all of the chips are down. They do not back away when the stakes are high, but instead, they attack as if they couldn't lose. They bounce back after a disappointing loss. They do not waste any time worrying about the past, but rather learn from it so they can improve their game. They relax and let their talent out on game day rather than being tense, anxious, and nervous. They love pressure because it is an opportunity for them to see how good they can be. Most importantly, they have the confidence that they can do anything, not because they have done it before, but because they know they are capable.

Mental toughness has to be developed as it is not a trait we pick up at birth. Much like building a muscle, building mental toughness, takes intentional focus and practice. In future articles, I will be discussing many aspects of mental toughness, as well as providing steps to help readers condition themselves to become stronger mentally. My goal for readers to become tougher is not only so they can compete to the best of their ability, but to also take what they learn into every part of their life. There is no doubt that someone who can control their emotions and state of mind regardless of the circumstances surrounding them make better spouses, parents, children, employees, leaders, competitors, teammates and the list goes on and on. I look forward to meeting with you again soon.

GROUND DRIVING

LET'S MOVE FORWARD

By Ariel Doughty
Trainer & Competitor

Ground work is one of the most important foundation steps I take in training my futurity and open horses. Whether it is a yearling pulled out of the pasture, or a seasoned horse I take into training, the first place we go is the round pen. This is where I gain respect, proper communication, and a bond that will last a lifetime. Ground driving is a very important part of this. It teaches softness, collection, a nice round frame, conditions muscles, forward motion, and how to respond properly to a bit.

Before you start driving your horse, it is very important to make sure their teeth have been checked by an equine dentist. If your horse's teeth have any caps or have jagged edges, it can cause an array of issues once you introduce the bit. I always want to give my horse and myself the best opportunity to succeed, and not teach my horse to hate the bit before we even get started.

Let's talk about proper equipment I use when ground driving my horses. I always start with a smooth, broken snaffle with a copper mouth piece. I also like the snaffle to have some weight to it. My driving lines are leather and are also heavy. I run my lines through the stirrups and tie the stirrups underneath the saddle so that they do not flop around too much.

When I am ready to start driving my horse, I have already let them carry the bit, taught them to give to pressure to each side, lunged them, and have done extensive desensitizing with that horse. I want every experience my horse goes through to be a positive one. Clear communication with my horse and getting them comfortable with each step is a valuable building block to a successful future.

His 1st foals are yearlings of 2016.

On day one, I will start in the round pen by asking for a nice easy walk. I want to let them get comfortable with me being behind them and adding pressure from behind to move forward. My horse also needs to feel the lines moving and flapping against their body. The next step I ask for is a turn back on the fence. The reason I ask for the turn back first is because I want to encourage forward movement. I also feel it is more natural for them to want to come around in a turn. I start this at a walk until they get comfortable with this step. I am looking for a nice fluid turn without having to ask too much. I also want to have control coming out of the turn without the horse wanting to take off and panic on the back side.

The next step is asking for a stop. By this point my horse has an idea of what the pressure of the lines feels like against their body and in their mouth. Again at the walk, I want to be sure to use my voice and use equal pressure on the lines to ask for my stop. Once my horse stops, I give a release on my lines to reward my horse's work. I then ask them to attempt to back. Even if it is half of a step, that is good enough for me in the beginning. Once again I give a release and I want my horse to just stand and relax. This is one of the hardest things to ask a horse to do. I want my horses to understand that it is ok to relax and wait for me to ask them to move forward on my time. When my horse starts moving, I keep equal pressure on my lines and I want to keep the horse equally between the lines. As soon as my horse relaxes, I give a release to reward good behavior. Once I am ready, I ask for movement at a walk again and continue to smooth this process out. Naturally they will start to give to the bit, relax and move fluidly.

Over the next couple of days, I will keep doing these basic exercises, making them second nature to my horse and me. I will continue to advance to the jog and trot as well during this period. I believe there is a big difference between a jog and trot. I want to make sure I communicate this to my horse. I want to teach my horse from a young age that they can keep their body rounded, slow their feet with forward momentum and stay supple in the mouth, as well as gain speed without getting strung out. This all starts during ground work. When a horse is turning a barrel, I want them to collect their body and still have four-wheel drive through the turn. Teaching your horse the difference between the jog and the trot builds this foundation before you even get on their back.

Once I can successfully do all of the above, I will start teaching them to do roll-backs on the fence. I do not want my horse to feel panicked or feel out of control during the roll-back. I ask first at a walk. On the back side of the turn, I want my horse to gather up and move out of the turn. This relates to forward movement through the turn and using their whole body on the pattern. I do not want my horse to dump on his front end or swing his hip out in the turn. Learning how to effectively use your outside line and controlling outside body movement from the ground will instill this. I want my horse to get comfortable and efficient at each gate before I advance on to the next.

I also want to introduce my horse to forward flexion and lateral collection. I ask my horse to give their head to each side moving forward. I want to see the corner of their eye and at first I will not ask for more than one stride. Once this becomes easy, I will increase the amount of time I will ask for their head to each side. Anything I will ask for on their back, I want to ask for on the ground first.

Loping is one of the final stages. I want to make sure I have control and my horse has full comprehension of his duties at the slower gates before I advance on to the lope. Only then, I will ask for a lope and go through the same process. When loping, it is imperative that my horse be on the correct lead at all times. The only difference I have at the lope, is I do not ask for turn-backs first. I will ask for my stop first. I will also ask for an extended lope and a slow lope. I want to teach my horse to learn where their body is at and how to control it with forward momentum.

Now it is time for me to get on! It is amazing to me the difference ground driving a horse first makes in the end result. It takes the pulling out of control, misunderstanding and awkwardness out of the equation. The last place I want to be is on some horse's back with no control and that animal having no understanding of why I am pulling on them. Instead, I step on a nice broke horse that already knows how to collect and respond properly to the bit. Ground driving teaches my horses to be soft and supple and be able to handle the pressure of me pushing them into the bridle right away. What my horses need at this point on their way down the futurity road are many miles and wet saddle blankets.

In this new day of barrel racing, every one thousandth of a second does count. When you run your futurity colt down that alley, you can't just hope and wish your horse will turn. Nor can you get away anymore with "high loping" to the first. If that is the case, you might as well not enter. You have to know with everything you have and trust that your partner will run at full speed down the alley and sit down and turn when you get to the barrel. Ground driving gives me a foundation I can count on.

DRY SPOTS

Thoughts on Dry Spots

By Mike Easton

There is a great deal of misunderstanding in the equine world in respect to dry spots and what they indicate. Not all dry spots are bad, but you have to understand the mitigating factors, and learn to read what the dry spots are telling you.

Much has transpired over the years with changes in horse conformation and the traditional saddle trees. It used to be trees were only available in two or three types. The only consideration given was to width and very little to bar angle and bar twist. Then, as the purebred industry grew, saddle makers were often tree makers and the good ones started to adjust the trees for the new types of horses that were being bred.

The whole focus was to change the trees so even pressure existed under all points of the tree bars to carry weight correctly. Today, this has progressed to the point where some of the good saddle makers have as many as 20 different kinds of combinations. However, most commercial companies generally only have 5-7.

When it comes to saddle fit, at 5 Star we generally feel there is no such thing as a "perfect fit" because the condition of the horse changes so much throughout the year. In the northern states and Canada, where winter becomes a "put the horse up and get fluffy on hay and grain," this is especially true.

With all of the aforementioned, the dry spot on the horse and pad is where the bulk of the pressure is being exerted from riding, fit, or both, or over-cinching.

What one really wants to see with a good pad that will wick moisture is a nice pattern of dryness demonstrating the shape of the entire bar(s) of the saddle! When one has been using pad material that has synthetic fiber or foam, wicking is limited and/or impossible, so dry spots normally will not show up. And if they do with synthetic material there is a terrible saddle fit issue because so much heat is being generated from a pressure point area that no moisture is being allowed to deposit. If this continues, permanent or semi-permanent damage to the area could occur.

Now if one does not have dryness that shows a complete bar pattern from a wicking material, and only isolated dry spots, one knows this is where the greatest amount of pressure exists. Size and location (normally on shoulder points) give clues as to whether the saddle tree is too wide, too narrow, poor twist, broken and/or a combination.

So with wool pads, to begin with, one wants to see dryness. And if the dry spots (with reasonable pressure) do not seem to be making the horse sore after a ride, no harm is being done. However, if tenderness does exist the saddle is the first place one deals with in clearing up the issue.

Given the fact that saddles are expensive, and if they fit and the animal dies, the luxury of replacing them is not always possible—so one must be practical about padding. While I must point out that no matter how excellent the pad, it will never replace a well-fitting saddle, it can help alleviate some of the issues of a poorly-fitting saddle (as evidenced by dry spots) in the short term.

In conclusion, while dry spots can be an indication of a poorly-fitting saddle or a poor choice of padding material, with a good-quality pad made out of a wicking material such as wool, dry spots can be a sign that everything is working together as it should, if you know what to look for. Keep this in mind, check your horse regularly for soreness—and learn to read the dry spots.
